

Providing Life Saving Therapies to Sri Lanka – Urgent Call

SACS Northern California is collaborating with Stanford University professors to provide Peritoneal Dialysis Fluids to middle age farm workers at Kandy Teaching Hospital(KTH) in Sri Lanka.

Dear Friends in USA,

Due to the current economic situation in Sri Lanka, fluids required for dialysis patients are running very low. Patients use these peritoneal dialysis fluids in a home setting on a daily basis and not having access to them will lead to death. Many of these patients are farm workers and are not suitable to undergo transplant. There is an uneven supply of dialysis fluids from the government due to lack of dollars as identified by professors at Stanford University who have a clinical relationship and collaboration with Kandy Teaching Hospital. Each patient consumes approximately $9 worth of fluids a day. More on the clinical collaboration can be found at <https://med.stanford.edu/nephrology/tkd.html>
